California One Page Will — Guide

Hello.

This one-page California Will was designed for most Californians. Read on and consider whether it's right for you.

This will provides an outright gift of everything to your spouse. If you are not survived by a spouse, your estate is shared equally by your children. If you are not survived by children, your property is inherited by your closest next-of-kin.

You can choose your Executor, a Custodian for your children's inheritance, and even nominate your children's' Guardian. And, if you change your mind about anything, you can just make out a fresh California Will.

This will might be a good fit for you if:

- You're not rich;
- You've never written a will before;
- You've never been divorced;
- You wouldn't need to name non-citizens as your executor, guardian, or custodian choices.

To put things another way, if any of the below applies to you, check with an attorney before using this California Will:

- You have divorced or remarried
- You are a parent of stepchildren or adopted children
- You are a parent who must treat their children differently
- You are a non-citizen.
- You must choose a non-citizen as your executor, guardian, or custodian
- You are a millionaire, or even richer
